Abel CA	SBA	SR8625	02/10/1942	HMS Tamar. Hong Kong Naval Base. Drowned, POW (along with many other medical shipmates) onboard SS Lisbon Maru sunk by US Submarine Grouper . ² Panel 71, Column 2, Plymouth Naval Memorial, Devon, UK.

² Lisbon Maru was a Japanese freighter which was used as a troopship and prisoner-of-war transport between China and Japan. When she was sunk by USS Grouper (SS-214) on 1 October 1942, she was carrying, in addition to Japanese Army personnel, almost 2,000 British prisoners of war captured after the fall of Hong Kong in December 1941. Over 800 of these men died either directly as a result of the sinking, or were shot or otherwise killed by the Japanese while swimming away from the wreck. The ship should have carried appropriate markings to alert Allied forces to the nature of its cargo but did not do so.

³ HMS Hermes, an aircraft carrier, sank with the loss of 307 men. Most of the survivors of the attack were picked up by the hospital ship Vita.

⁶ On the night of 19-20 December, Neptune, leading the line, struck two mines, part of a newly laid Italian minefield. The other cruisers present, Aurora and Penelope, also struck mines. While reversing out of the minefield, Neptune struck a third mine, which took off her propellers and left her dead in the water. Aurora was unable to render assistance as she was already down to 10 knots (19 km/h) and needed to turn back to Malta. Penelope was also unable to assist. The destroyers Kandahar and Lively were sent into the minefield to attempt a tow. The former struck a mine and began drifting. Neptune then signalled for Lively to keep clear. Neptune hit a fourth mine and quickly capsized. Only 30 seamen, out of her complement of 767, initially survived the sinking, and only one was still alive when their lifeboat was picked up five days later by the Italian torpedo boat Achille Papa.

⁹ The Albert Medal in Gold (Posthumous). Sick Berth Attendant George William Beeching, C/MX 65180. SBA Beeching was between decks when HMS Ibis was hit. The explosion caused serious damage and the ship took a list to starboard of about 15 degrees. The Emergency Lighting partly failed and the Mess Decks were deep in oil fuel. SBA Beeching showed great courage and presence of mind. He helped those who came forward with wounds, one man very badly burned about the face and hands. SBA Beeching took him to the Sick Bay and gave him morphia. When the ship began to heel over, and it was apparent that she would capsize, he helped the man to the deck, gave him a life belt, and got him into the water before abandoning ship himself. Sick Berth Attendant Beeching was not seen again.

¹⁴ Captured by the British at Portsmouth on 3 July 1940 and lost 14 December 1940 during a storm 25 miles south-south-west off Eddystone while she was serving in the Royal Navy.

¹⁶ At 00:58 U-47 fired a salvo of three torpedoes and one struck the bow of Royal Oak at 01:04, shaking the ship and waking the crew. Little visible damage was received and many sailors returned to their hammocks, unaware that the ship was under attack. U-47 then fired another 3 torpedoes and of which all three struck the battleship in quick succession amidships and detonated. The explosions blew a hole in the armoured deck, destroying the Stokers', Boys' and Marines' messes and causing a loss of electrical power. Cordite from a magazine ignited and the ensuing fireball passed rapidly through the ship's internal spaces. Royal Oak quickly listed some 15 degrees, sufficient to push the open starboard-side portholes below the waterline. She soon rolled further onto her side to 45 degrees, hanging there for several minutes before disappearing beneath the surface at 01:29, 13 minutes after the second strike. 833 men died with the ship, including Rear-Admiral Henry Blagrove, commander of the Second Battle Squadron. Over one hundred of the dead were Boy Seamen, not yet 18 years old, the largest ever such loss in a single Royal Navy action.

²³ Whilst defending Convoy HX 228 on 3 March, HMS Harvester forced U-444 to the surface and then rammed it. She was badly damaged by the ramming, but she rescued five survivors after the submarine sank. The next day, Harvester was torpedoed by U-432 and broke in half. Nine officers and 136 ratings were lost, but the French corvette Aconit rammed and sank U-432 herself and then rescued Harvester's few survivors.

²⁴ Gloucester was nicknamed The Fighting G and was part of Vice Admiral Cunningham's Mediterranean fleet in 1940. She was attacked by German Stuka dive bombers and sunk north of Crete. Of the 807 men aboard at the time of her sinking, only 85 survived. Her sinking is considered to be one of Britain's worst wartime naval disasters.

²⁹ At 06:30 on 21 August, Kite slowed to 6 knots (10 km/h) to untangle her "foxers" (anti acoustic torpedo noise makers, towed astern). The decision to do so, rather than severing the foxers' cables and abandoning them, was made by her temporary commander. At that speed Kite was a sitting duck, and she was hit by two torpedoes from U-344 and sank. Of Kite's crew of 10 officers and 207 ratings, 60 survived the attack, but from the freezing Arctic water only 14 sailors were picked up alive by HMS Keppel. Five of the rescued died on board HMS Keppel leaving only nine to make it to shore. U-344 was sunk the next day by depth charges from a single Swordfish plane from HMS Vindex.

³⁰ A French ship La Rhin turned over to the Royal Navy and converted into a special service vessel and renamed. In 1941 Fidelity operated off the coast of Southern France under the direction of the Special Operations Executive (SOE), landing agents and picking up escaped prisoners, disguised as Spanish or Portuguese freighter. In 1942 Fidelity was refitted to operate as a commando carrier armed with four 4-inch guns, four 21-inch torpedo tubes, and carried two OS2U Kingfisher floatplanes, the motor torpedo boat MTB-105 and the landing craft HMS LCV-752 and LCV-754. In December 1942 Fidelity, with T Company, 40 Commando aboard, joined Convoy ON154 and was attacked by U-boats from 27 December while north of the Azores. Fidelity, suffering from engine problems, was left behind by the convoy. On 30 December she was torpedoed and sunk by U-435 with the loss of 274 crew, 51 Marines and 44 survivors from SS Empire Shackleton. The only survivors were the eight crew of the motor torpedo boat, detached on anti-submarine patrol, who were later picked up by HMCS Woodstock, and two crewmen of a seaplane that had crashed on take-off on 28 December and been picked up by HMCS St Laurent.

on bad design of the stowage and handling. There were merits in both arguments but thereafter the stowage on her British operated sister ships was reduced from 75-88,000 gallons down to 36,000 gallons, and the USN reduced theirs also. The government of the time, eager to avoid damage to morale and anxious to avoid any suggestion of faulty US construction, tried to cover up the sinking. The local media were ordered to make no reference to the tragedy, and the authorities ordered the dead to be buried in a mass unmarked grave. Furious relatives protested and some of the dead were returned to their loved ones for burial. The survivors were ordered not to talk about what happened.

³⁹ The ship broke in two, and despite rescue efforts by other ships, 73 crewmen died (seven officers and 63 men).

⁴⁰ Q-ships, also known as Q-boats, decoy vessels, special service ships, or mystery ships, were heavily armed merchant ships with concealed weaponry, designed to lure submarines into making surface attacks. This gave Q-ships the chance to open fire and sink them. The basic ethos of every Q-ship was to be a wolf in sheep's clothing. They were used by the Royal Navy during the First & Second World Wars as a countermeasure against German U-boats and Japanese submarines.

⁴³ On 3 August, she was hit and sunk during a heavy attack on the British assault area by a force of E-boats and low flying aircraft. Those that survived the initial attack spent up to eight hours in the water before being rescued, and many of these perished. Four officers and 126 ratings were lost.

Young H	SBA	P/MX82450	14/02/1942	HMS Li Wo ⁵⁷ . Panel 69, Column 3, Portsmouth Naval Memorial, Hampshire, UK.

⁵⁶ Q-ships, also known as Q-boats, decoy vessels, special service ships, or mystery ships, were heavily armed merchant ships with concealed weaponry, designed to lure submarines into making surface attacks. This gave Q-ships the chance to open fire and sink them. The basic ethos of every Q-ship was to be a wolf in sheep's clothing. They were used by the Royal Navy during the First & Second World Wars as a countermeasure against German U-boats and Japanese submarines.

⁵⁷ HMS Li Wo, a converted river ferry, left Singapore at dawn on 13 February 1942, and was attacked several times from the air, suffering some damage. The next day while passing north of the Bangka Strait, she encountered a convoy of Japanese transport ships accompanied by a squadron of warships launching "Operation L", the Invasion of Sumatra. The commander of Li Wo, Temporary Lieutenant Thomas Wilkinson RNR, informed the ship's company that he intended to close and attack the enemy. Li Wo altered course towards the leading transport ship of the convoy at full speed, unfurling her battle ensign, and opening fire with her four-inch gun (for which she had only 13 shells, plus three practice rounds). She scored a number of direct hits on the transport, starting fires aboard, and causing the troops aboard to abandon ship. She then attacked another transport ship with machine gun fire. Li Wo was then heavily shelled by the light cruiser Yura and the destroyers Fubuki and Asagiri. Out of ammunition and now sinking, she rammed the first enemy transport, which later sank, before finally sinking herself. Of the 84 crew, only 7 survived to be taken prisoner.
